Preface

THE task of the editors of the Cardinal and Blue is finished. We have cherished ambitions, only to see them fade away for the most part; but in the main we have tried faithfully to tell you something about our life here, and we trust that to the men of Old Central when far from its walls the book will recall something of their college days. Our labors are now turned over to those who entrusted this work to us, and we present this volume to our classmates of nineteen-eight, to the student body, the faculty, and the alumni.
